What is this guide about?

A Will is the only means that provides certainty that your wishes will be met after you die. Over half of the UK adult population do not have a Will. Whilst it is an incredibly important document, many people have either not got around to making one or have deliberately avoided it, either because they feel it is unnecessary or it is complicated; however, the process can be quite simple and whilst it is never too early to make a Will, it can be too late.

This guide outlines the process involved in making your Will, why you should make a Will and the situation that will arise if you do not do so. It also provides some other aspects you should consider and the need to seek professional advice.

How to use this guide

Read this guide if you want to know how to get started, what to consider and how to make your Will legally effective.

We pride ourselves on removing legal jargon to ensure Wills are clear and understandable. As such, legal terminologies are italicised throughout this guide and explained in the Glossary for you.

After reading this guide, you will have a better understanding of how to get started on writing your own Will. To help you further, we have included a directory of useful organisations to contact and how they can benefit or help you.

If you require further help and information, please do visit www.adewills.co.uk and see how we can help you get started and finished on making your Will with you.

Do I need to make a Will?

Discussing and considering Wills, inheritance and post-death plans can often be a difficult and distressing topic which people prefer to avoid. However, considering these now whilst you can will make things easier in the future for both yourself and your loved ones. It is never too early to make a Will, but it can be too late.

Making your own Will is the only way to legally make known your wishes on how your estate is to be shared out to the people and causes (such as charities) who mean most to you and who you wish to benefit.

Making a Will is more than just writing a document, it means:

- Giving your family and friends reassurance that they are respecting your last wishes, making things easier on a personal and emotional level.
- Helping to avoid disputes and friction amongst your family and friends. A poorly drafted, outdated or lost Will can cause arguments, stress and breakdowns between family and friends who compete and disagree over who you wanted to benefit.
- Giving yourself reassurance and confidence that your property will be passed to the people and causes you want to benefit most.
- Protecting the assets in your estate for future generations. A well-structured Will can ensure that property you wish to stay in your family does so and remains as a family tradition or heirloom.
- Outlining your decisions on other aspects such as appointing guardians for your children, who is to look after your pets and even funeral preferences. These provisions can further ease the process for your loved ones.

What if I don't make a Will?

If you die without having made a valid Will, you are said to die intestate. The decisions on how your property is distributed is taken out of your control and is instead divided according to the intestacy rules (Figure 1). Your assets will be distributed after all of your debts, funeral and administration expenses, and any taxes have been paid.

The intestacy rules state that:

- if you have a spouse or civil partner and children, your spouse or civil partner inherits all of your personal possessions and the first £270,000 of your estate, plus half of anything above this amount. Your children are then entitled to the other half of this balance
- if you have a spouse or civil partner and don't have any children, your spouse or civil partner inherits your whole estate, including any personal possessions
- if you and your partner are not married or in a civil partnership, they have no automatic right to inherit from your estate without a Will. This applies even if you have lived together for a long time or have children together
- if you have no spouse, civil partner or children, other relatives such as parents, siblings or nieces and nephews may have a right to inherit
- if you have no surviving relatives who can inherit under these rules your estate is passed to the Crown.

You may note that certain ones you love and care about are not covered in this flowchart, such as your unmarried cohabiting partner or stepchildren. The rigidity of the rules increases the stress and hardship which can be a worrying prospect if you do not have a Will. Do not worry if you do not have a Will at the moment, as the remainder of this guide will show you how to avoid these intestacy rules and help prepare you to write your own Will.

How to make my Will

The Will must be written properly and signed properly to be valid and to ensure things run more smoothly when the time comes and your loved ones need to administer your estate.

There are a number of options available to you in making a Will, including:

1. Lawyers

When you come to write your own Will, it is always best to get advice from a lawyer who specialises in Wills and probate. Solicitors can be useful but generally are not specialists in the area and often cover another legal area, such as family law, and provide Will-drafting services in an ancillary format.

Wills and probate is the third most complained area in services provided by solicitors.

It is important to choose a lawyer who can help you with your needs but it is important to remember that Will writing is not a reserved legal activity and, as such, is not a regulated area. It is therefore important to choose a lawyer who is a member of a society.

2. Make Your Own Will

You can make your own Will through do-it-yourself Will kits and forms available to buy from stationery shops and online. However, whilst this is attractive as it appears quick, easy and cheap now, it can cause costly legal problems for your beneficiaries and executors after your death. There is a higher probability of mistakes being made, important details being missed or a lack of clarity in the information used to fill them in.

At the end of the day, a Will is a legal document which needs to be written and signed correctly, so it seems only logical that legal advice be sought to ensure it is effective and valid.

Valuing my estate

A partial intestacy arises where the Will fails to cover all of your property so it is essential that your Will covers your whole estate. A good way of understanding the nature and extent of your estate is to draw up a list of your assets and liabilities.

Typical assets that make an estate include:

- Your home, and any other property you own;
- Bank and building society accounts savings;
- National Savings, such as premium bonds;
- Insurance, such as life assurance or an endowment policy;
- Pension funds that include a lump sum payment on death;
- Motor vehicles;
- Jewellery, antiques and other personal belongings;
- Money you are owed by another; and
- Furniture and other household contents.

It is also important that you consider any debts you may have, including:

- A mortgage or equity release;
- A credit card balance;
- A bank overdraft; and
- Loans.

What should I include in my Will?

It can often be difficult to think about what you want, or even need, to include in your Will. Our online and telephone Will writing services are comprehensive to cover all the essential considerations about your estate and Will instructions. We then discuss and confirm these with you in an online meeting. These are very useful means of guiding you as to what is needed and also allows us to produce an effective Will which covers your whole estate and distributes it how you wish.

Clarity is key when writing your Will. Your Will should include:

- Who will deal with your estate after your death (your executors);
- Who you want to benefit from your Will (your beneficiaries);
- Whether you wish to give any specific gifts to particular people (non-residuary legacies);
- Where the residuary estate is to go;
- What you want to happen if any of your beneficiaries should die before you;
- Whether you wish to leave any money to charity.

How to sign my Will

Many believe the hard part is over when the Will is written and often overlook the importance of ensuring effective execution of the Will. However, incorrect signing of the Will is one of the most common causes of issues when trying to administer an estate. The worrying truth is that if the Will is not signed correctly, it will not be valid and, as a result, your wishes may not be followed.

The legal requirements in signing a Will to render it legally valid are that it must be signed by the testator in the presence of two independent witnesses, who must also then sign it in the testator's presence – thus, all three should be present in the room together and attentive to the process.

Anyone who is named as a beneficiary in the Will, their spouse or civil partner, cannot act as a witness, otherwise they will lose their right to their inheritance. Beneficiaries should not even be present in the room when the Will is signed. This is to ensure that the execution of the Will is as neutral and devoid of bias or vested interests as much as possible. People often choose people close to them to be their executors and often leave them a gift or legacy in their Will for them; for this reason, it is often unsuitable for the executor to be a witness to the Will.

What else do I need to think about?

1. Executors

Being an executor requires a lot of work and responsibility, so it is important to give careful consideration to who you appoint.

Things to consider are:

- Their availability and willingness to act, considering the size and nature of your estate, including the geographic location;
- The possibility of conflicts of interests, amongst potential executors and beneficiaries, or even amongst just the executors;
- The possibility of them predeceasing you; and
- Their costs and remuneration.

The main categories of typical executors are:

- Individuals (relatives and friends);
- Solicitors, accountants or other professionals; and
- Trust corporations, including banks, who are so authorised.

If you have no one who can act as an executor, there is a government official called the Public Trustee who can do so for you.

Generally, executors and trustees are not entitled to remuneration for their services, although they can be reimbursed out of the estate for expenses incurred in carrying out their duties.

2. Trusts

A trust is a useful instrument for looking after assets for other people, such as someone too young to manage their affairs. If the beneficiary under the trust is under the age of 18, then you need to appoint at least two trustees or executors. Whilst trustees and executors have different roles, people typically choose the same people to fill both roles as they are fiduciary roles and so are subject to the same statutory and equitable obligations.

Children or grandchildren with learning disabilities could be left particularly vulnerable by directly inheriting money, so a trust is particularly useful in these circumstances.

3. Inheritance Tax

You do not need to pay any Inheritance Tax ('IHT') on the first £325,000 of your estate. This is known as the nil-rate band. However, IHT is paid at a rate of 40% on the portion of your estate valued above the nil-rate band.

If you leave your main residence property to your child or grandchild, then you can gain an additional tax-free allowance of £175,000 (tax year 2020/21). This is a relatively new concept and is known as the residence nil-rate band.

There are transfers exempt from IHT. If you leave your whole estate to your spouse or civil partner, then there is no IHT to pay.

If your spouse or civil partner dies and their estate does not use all of their available tax-free allowance, any unused allowance can be transferred to your estate.

Gifts to charity are completely exempt from IHT and if your estate is liable for IHT and you leave 10% or more of it to charity, then a reduced IHT rate of 36% may be applicable to the remainder of your estate.

Gifts made whilst you are still alive, in the 7 years preceding your death, could still be liable to IHT, depending on how much they were and when they were given.

4. Guardians

If you have children under the age of 18, you may want to consider who you would like to bring them up as their primary caregiver on your death.

A testamentary guardian obtains parental responsibility when the child in question does not have any surviving parents. If no guardian is appointed, one may be appointed by the Court. Whilst you can appoint a testamentary guardian in your Will, you can do so through other means.

However, it is usually convenient to make the appointment in the Will so you can accompany it with other information and provisions, such as any related trusts or directions on the child's upbringing (though, such directions are "wishes" and have no legal effect).

A person may disclaim the appointment so it is important to carefully consider and discuss the appointment with your prospective testamentary guardians.

5. Funeral arrangements

Any wishes in the Will regarding funeral arrangements are not binding – It is the executors and not the testator who have the right to dispose of the testator's corpse. However, your views regarding the arrangements and disposal of your body must be taken into account.

Whilst it is helpful to include your wishes in your Will, it is even more helpful to discuss these with your family so there are no surprises.

6. Important documents relating to your Will

When your executors come to administer your estate, it can be really useful if they know where you keep important documents, such as:

- The original copy of your Will;
- Your property deeds;
- Insurance policies;
- Savings accounts and any investments documents;
- Passport;
- Driving licence;
- Mortgage or loan documents;
- Pension documents; and
- Utility bills.

7. Letter of Wishes

This is a confidential document that can accompany a Will. It is not legally binding, but can be useful in listing specific items you wish to give to people and usually covers items of sentimental importance, such as ornaments, furniture or jewellery. However, if these items are worth a substantial amount of money, it is better to deal with these in the Will. As it is not legally binding, it is important you choose someone you trust to carry out your requests.

Glossary

Abatement

If there are insufficient funds in an estate to pay all of the legacies in full, those legacies must abate. This means that they must be reduced proportionately. They abate in the reverse order of distribution. Specific legacies are more protected than general legacies in terms of abatement.

Ademption

Occurs when property gifted in a Will is not in the estate's possession at the time of the testator's death because the property has been sold, destroyed or given away before the testator's death.

Assets

Items of property owned by a person or company, regarded as having value and available to meet debts, commitments, or legacies. For example, cash in bank, investments, property or business, vehicles, pay-outs from life assurance policies.

Beneficiary

A person who derives advantage from something, especially a trust, Will, or life insurance policy.

Codicil

An addition or supplement that explains, modifies, or revokes a Will or part of one. A codicil normally 'republishes' a Will on the date of the codicil.

It operates so that, effectively, it is as if the testator makes a new Will on the date of the codicil, in the form of the earlier Will as amended by the codicil.

Donatio Mortis Causa

A gift of personal property made by someone who expects to die in the immediate future, taking full effect only after the donor dies.

Estate

All the money and property owned by a particular person, especially at death (the deceased's uncompleted financial matters).

Execution

The putting into effect of a legal instrument or order. This is the formal witnessing and signing process which brings your Will into effect and renders it a legally-valid document.

Executor

The individual(s) responsible for administering the deceased's estate in accordance with the instructions as provided in the Will. The executor's authority to deal with the estate derives from the Will and the Grant of Probate acts as confirmation that both the Will and the appointment are valid.

Fiduciary

A person or organisation that acts on behalf of another person(s), putting their interests ahead of their own, with a duty to preserve good faith and trust.

Inheritance Tax

A UK tax levied on property and money acquired by gift or inheritance.

Intestate

A person who has died without having made a valid Will.

Joint Tenancy

A type of joint ownership of property, where each owner is called a "joint tenant" and each owns the whole of the asset, rather than a distinct fractional share.

When a joint tenant dies, the asset in question does not pass to his personal representatives as part of his estate; instead, the asset (usually land, but can be other property types, such as a joint bank account or shares) automatically passes to the surviving joint tenant(s).

Legacy

An amount of money or property left to someone in a Will. See also Non-Residuary Gifts and Residuary Gifts.

Letters of Administration

Granted by the probate registry to appoint appropriate people to deal with a deceased person's estate where property will pass under the Intestacy Rules or where there are no executors living having been validly appointed under the deceased's Will.

If there is a Will, then the application is for 'Letters of Administration with Will annexed'. The people who obtain a successful grant are called the 'administrators'.

Liabilities

Something a person or company owes, usually a sum of money. Liabilities are settled over time through the transfer of economic benefits including money, goods, or services.

Non-Residuary Legacies

Specified gifts for beneficiaries. The type of non-residuary legacy affects the protection of the property in question regarding abatement.

Demonstrative Legacies

A general legacy but where there is a particular fund provided to satisfy it.

General Legacies

A gift of property not distinguished in the Will from property of a similar kind.

Pecuniary Legacies

A gift of money.

Specific Legacies

A gift of a particular item of property distinguished in the Will from any other property of the same kind owned by the deceased.

Partial Intestacy

Where a Will fails to dispose of all the testator's assets or the whole beneficial interest therein. The assets which are not duly covered in the Will fall under the provisions of the Intestacy Rules.

Personal Representative

An umbrella term to cover the executor or administrator of the estate of a deceased person.

Probate

The judicial process whereby a Will is "proved" in a court of law and accepted as a valid public document that is the true last testament of the deceased.

Applying for the legal right to deal with someone's property, money and possessions (their 'estate') when they die is called 'applying for probate'. If the person left a Will, the executors will get a 'grant of probate'. If the person did not leave a Will, the administrators will get 'letters of administration'.

Residuary Beneficiary

A beneficiary who has been left a percentage of what is left in the estate after all debts and expenses have been settled. They are called residuary beneficiaries because they receive the residue of the estate.

Residuary Estate

The rest of a deceased person's estate which is left after the payment of specific gifts, debts, funeral expenses and inheritance tax.

Tenancy in Common

Joint ownership of property where each owner owns a separate share in the property. On the death of one of the tenants, their share passes to their beneficiaries in accordance with their Will or intestacy.

Testamentary Capacity

A person's legal and mental ability to make or alter a valid Will. If the person making the Will ('testator') lacks testamentary capacity at the time that the Will is executed, the Will is invalid. The test for capacity to execute a valid Will is based in case law which requires that the testator must:

- understand the nature of the Will and its effects;

- understand the extent of property/assets he has;
- understand the post-death claims he must consider; and
- have no disorder of the mind.

Testamentary Guardianship

The process whereby a guardian is appointed for a child by someone in the event of their death. The guardian may be, for example, a close relative such as a grandparent or sibling.

The nominated person is called the 'testamentary guardian'.

Testator

A man who has made a Will or given a legacy. The female version is "testatrix".

Trustee

An individual person or member of a board given control or powers of administration of property in trust with a legal obligation to administer it solely for the purposes specified. A trustee holds legal title to the trust property but must only use the property for the beneficiary's benefit.
